How to record

1. Record one character at a time: each has its own section, with the voice described at the top.
2. Read the line exactly as written. Words in CAPITALS are stressed; "..." is a pause; "—" means the line is cut off mid-word.
3. Stay inside the "max" length. Short and punchy beats slow and complete.
4. Record dry and close: no reverb, no effects, no music. The robot processing is added afterwards.
5. Record 3 takes of every line, and number them 1, 2, 3 in the file name (the best one first, if you can tell).
6. Format: OGG (Vorbis), mono, 48 kHz, highest quality setting (q 8 or more). No leading silence; half a second of room tone after each take is fine.
7. Save every take under the exact file name shown on its card, in the folder shown. The name is how the game finds it.
8. Tick the box on a card once its takes are saved.

Atlas

Flux's field AI

Voice: Gender-neutral to slightly low; calm, precise, warm underneath. A mission-control navigator who is also your friend. Dry humour by understatement. Never shouts: at critical moments it gets tighter and faster, not louder.

Drone Swarm copied.
It left us something.
That's lava down there. Stay on the metal.
Too wide to walk. Slide off the edge, you'll carry.
Hiss, then fire. Let the roar pass, then go.
Barrels! Watch the lamps, cross between them.
Forge hammers. Count the beat, then run.
Long way down. One ledge at a time.

...I was written from its first draft.
It's building a body. Out of our valley.

Flux... something's in the—
...You kept it out. Thank you.
The signal's lost its power station.
No more parts reach the Fortress.

Shield's down. The Fortress is open.
The foundry's cold. No more claws.
The mine's quiet. No more ore.
Locks shut. The barges stay home.
Lights on. Vex lost its screens.
Every line's cut. Vex is alone.

That's Vex. The real one.
Fire!
Ice!
Volt!
Wind!
Scrap!
Because they're free.
Lightning! Move when the ring lights up!
The roof's giving way!
Down to the Core! Don't fall in!
Vex is pressing something... Brace yourself!
Its arms first! The cannon and the lance!
Now the feet! Block the shockwaves!
It's down low. The head is in reach!
The core is open! Finish it!
Prism Cannon! Shield up!
Power's failing! Cross when the lights come back.
Ore cart's rolling! I steer, you shoot the moles.
Steep drop! Hold on tight!
Last stop. Out you hop!

The Spire is empty. I could run this city now. I won't. It's theirs.

Ice! Let go of the stick and you'll keep sliding.
Spikes under that ice. Walk it straight, no sharp turns.
Frost thrower. It glows and hisses first. Cross when it's quiet.
Shadows on the floor? Icicles. Step out of the ring!
That pillar's cracked. Shoot it, and there's your shortcut.

Icy stairs. Go slow — the landing's small.
Those panels pulse. Wait on a dark row, then step.
Hands off the controls — I'll drive, you shoot.
Drones ahead! Shoot them before they swoop.
Big drop ahead. Hold on — keep shooting!
End of the line. Hop off!
Gap's too wide to walk. Slide off the edge — you'll carry.
Nice leap. Now don't look down.
Shuttles. Step on when it docks, off at the other end.
Wait for the gust to die, then move. Or hide behind a pillar.
Bobbing platforms. Hop on at the bottom, ride it up.
That panel shows a pattern. The lamps on the wall don't. Yet.
That frame has a favourite colour. Only its lamps should shine.
Every hit changes a lamp's mind. The panel knows what it wants.
Well, well. Someone likes puzzles.

Dr. Vex

The showman doctor, the villain

Voice: Big, theatrical, pompous: a game-show host crossed with a vain surgeon. Relishes the words and stretches the big ones ("Maaag-nificent"). Over the top but never scary: the audience is all ages.

Avoid: Imitating any specific film villain's voice or catchphrases: the archetype, not an impression.
